BARDSTOWN

To many the town nestled in the heart of Nelson County is known as Historic Bardstown — not simply Bardstown.

With a host of bed and breakfast lodgings, museums and historic landmarks, Bardstown has become a favorite tourist attraction for many across the state, nation and world.

Bardstown has even been deemed a "little jewel" in a reference book for seekers, movers, shakers and retirees called "The 100 Best Small Towns in America."

Bardstown was settled beginning in 1780 by pioneers from Pennsylvania, Virginia and Maryland who were seeking a better life. It soon became a center for commerce, religion, law, education and medicine. It has remained that way more than 200 years later.

The city is named after William Bard, a settler who laid off the town into sections. His city was not fortified like other early settlements, but depended on outlying forts around the county for protection.

The log houses and pole cabins of the 1780s are gone. But scores of stately homes still line the city, many in one of two architectural styles, Georgian or Greek Revival.

Today, Bardstown is known for those landmark buildings and for its historic preservation efforts. Genealogists visit here from many different nations.

The city is also known for the festivals and street fairs held year-round.

The Kentucky Bourbon Festival, held every September, celebrates what was the backbone of Bardstown's economy, fine bourbon whiskey.

Though thousands of distilleries once operated in Kentucky, only nine are left in the entire state today. Today, two distilleries are headquartered in Bardstown. Two others operate just across the county line.

Barton Brands and Heaven Hill, both located in Bardstown, brew their smooth, tawny product and store it in the charred oak barrels that give bourbon its rich flavor.

A massive fire interrupted production temporarily at Heaven Hill in 1996, but did not snuff out the making of the firm's trademark bourbon.

The distillery continues processing its brew but now in a different location. However, the bottling operation and the warehouses still reside in Bardstown.

Besides Barton and Heaven Hill, the Jim Beam and Maker's Mark distilleries have strong Nelson County ties and have operations in adjacent counties, just over the line from Nelson County. Jim Beam also operates a bottling plant at Boston, in western Nelson County.

The presence of Japanese, German and Australian guests at the Kentucky Bourbon Festival shows the influence Bardstown's bourbon has around the world.

Other festivals like the Bardstown Arts and Crafts Fair and the Festival of Quilts showcase local artists along with those from across the states.

Bardstown is also home to an annual Christmas parade through downtown streets, a Civil War reenactment, an antique show and sale, a pumpkin festival and "Stephen Foster - The Musical," an outdoor drama.

Its proximity to Louisville has earned Bardstown the title of "bedroom community" — because many Louisville residents have moved their homes to Bardstown, but continue to commute to the larger city.

Bardstown is 34 miles south of Louisville and 58 miles west of Lexington. Its location in a centrally located state makes it a perfect stopping place along the way for many kinds of trade.

Its streets and homes are protected by 20 police officers and more than 45 firefighters. Most of the fire department force is volunteer.

Bardstown has a population of close to 7,600 people. It is governed by a part-time mayor, Bill Brown, six city council members, Ann Rosalie Ballard, Chuck Brauch, Francis Lydian, Evelyn Oakley, Bill Sheckles and Frank Brown Wilson, and a city administrator, Ed Meece.

EDUCATION

All three community school districts are on year-round calendars

Nelson County's schools offer traditional education in an atmosphere open to change.

The county has three districts: Nelson County Schools, Bardstown City Schools and the Catholic school system, which is run by the Archdiocese of Louisville.

All three districts now have year-round calendars, helping set the pace for alternative schedules in Kentucky.

During short vacations students have the option of taking enrichment or remedial classes.

Bardstown City Schools was one of the first two districts in the state to adopt a year-round calendar. The district's superintendent, Dr. Robert Smotherman, was recently elected to serve as president to the National Association for Year Round Education.

Besides the new calendars, the county's school districts are now adapting to the state's new CATS tests, an assessment that replaced KIRIS.

The test is different from KIRIS in that it has multiple choice questions and a norm reference that will allow it to be compared to national tests.

Also, money will be distributed to reward schools — those that exceed a goal line drawn on the graph — as a whole and not to individual teachers.

Besides test scores, accountability factors include attendance and dropout rates.

Bardstown City Schools

The Bardstown City Schools campus is located on North Fifth Street, not far from downtown.

All schools — early childhood, elementary, middle and high — are located on one campus, creating a unified learning community.

The district also extends its life-long learning philosophy into the community with its adult education program.

The district believes every child can succeed in the school system; it provides students with creative opportunities to learn as much and as quickly as possible.

The last five years have been a time of rapid growth and innovation for Bardstown City Schools.

It became one of Kentucky's first districts to adopt a year-round calendar. After five years of using this calendar — which alternates nine weeks of classes with two-week breaks — the results continue to be positive.

The district went to an alternative calendar to provide additional time for remediation throughout the year for students who need help; in the past, teachers relied only on summer school for this task.

A week of intersession during each break allows students to improve grades, work on skills or take enrichment courses, which provide opportunities to expand learning through a variety of experiences.

Leadership enhancement, nationally recognized science programs, environmental camps, music and art instruction and literature studies are but a few of the opportunities afforded students who attend intersession.

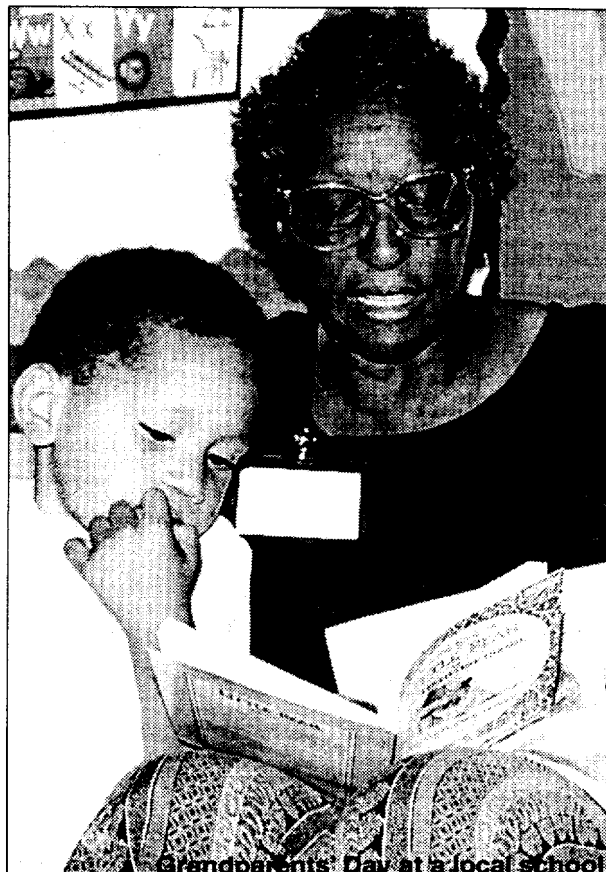

Also, the year-round expansion allowed child care services to grow. The district now offers these services for children in kindergarten through the fourth grade during intersessions, after school and during summer breaks.

Bardstown City Schools also has been an innovator of early childhood education programs. It started a 4-year-old program in 1985 and a 3-year-old program in 1998.

Now more than 200 children discover the fun of learning through play while developing intellectual, social and communication skills at Bardstown's early childhood programs.

Besides being a pioneer in early education programs, the city district was one of the first public school systems in the state to adopt a system-wide school uniform policy.

Technology has also been a priority for Bardstown.

The district is committed to being a leader among local school systems in this area; for example, the district's student to computer ratio is 5-1.

Students also have access to both Internet and e-mail services. And the district is currently upgrading its Local Area Network to increase capacity and data transfer speed.

Bardstown City Schools also has a Kentucky Tele-Linking Network Lab. Equipped with cameras and television monitors, KTNL lets students link up with schools throughout the state in an interactive format.

Also, the district also plans to build on to the high school building. The project will create a new media center — including a video production studio — and advanced science labs. Construction should be complete by June 2001.

Bardstown City Schools staff will be pleased to answer any questions you may have about its schools. If you would like to visit any, just call the office.

Nelson County Schools

Nelson County Schools is comprised of 10 schools on nine campuses throughout the county. The district has more than 4,500 students.

The system also offers services to three-year-old students with disabilities and to four-year-olds who qualify for the federal free-lunch program. Also, all-day kindergarten is available to all students.

Each of the district's six elementary schools offers a variation of the state's ungraded primary program. Three of the district's schools have wide-ranging programs. Nelson County High School offers a comprehensive program and is accredited by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

The district employs more than 250 support personnel and more than 300 certified staff members. Seventy-four percent of the teaching staff have a master's degree or beyond.

The district has made a major commitment to technology by placing a minimum of five computers in every elementary classroom and computer labs in each middle school in addition to the high school. Each school is connected to both a local area network and a wide area network, which offers connectivity to the Internet.

In the fall of 1997, a new freshman wing opened at the high school. It contains 22 classrooms, three science labs and a 200-seat gymnasium. Operating as a school within a school, the new wing gives students a year to adjust to the high school environment.

The district's well-defined school-to-work program offers job exploration opportunities in the elementary and middle schools and on-the-job training in the high school. The high school tech prep program has articulation agreements with several area colleges.

Nelson County High School and the Nelson County Area Technology Center work closely to provide students with entry-level job skills or a strong background for college. The two coordinate programs and operate on a block schedule.

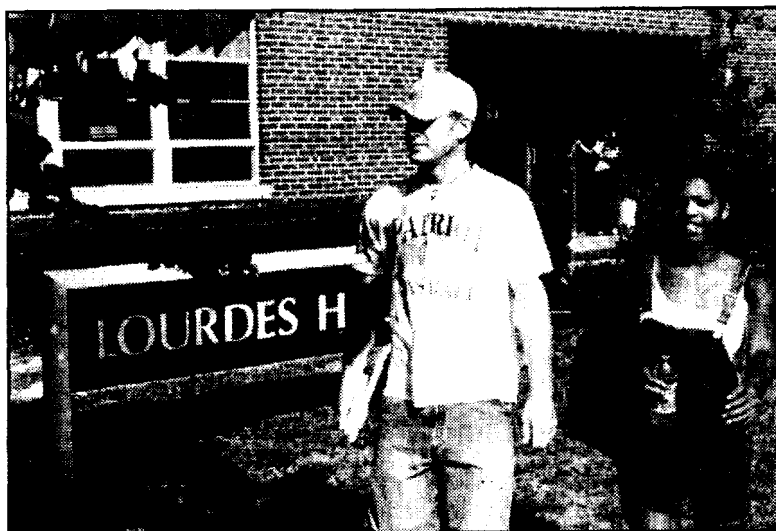

Elementary and middle schools offer services to gifted students, who are identified using a multiple-intelligences philosophy. The high school offers an array of advanced placement courses, which include art history, biology, calculus, chemistry, computer science, English literature and composition, French, physics, Spanish and U.S. history.

As part of its extensive dropout prevention plan, the district launched an innovative summer program in 1998 funded by a Goals 2000 grant. At-risk middle school students studied graphic design and video production in the high school's technology lab. In addition, students receive counseling and instruction relating to job and study skills and interpersonal communication.

Other programs for at-risk students include Reading Recovery, geared to six-year-olds; Extended School Services, tutoring for grades four and above; K-12 counseling; exceptional child education; Family Resource and Youth Services Centers; and drug and alcohol abuse prevention programs.

The district also sponsors an alternative classroom program, providing in-school suspension; the CHOICE program, featuring an educational approach based on behavior modification theory; and New Horizons High School, a night school program open to anyone who has left school without a diploma.

Since 1998, Nelson County Schools have operated on an alternative calendar. The school year is broken into four quarters separated by intersessions and vacations. The one-week intersession is devoted to acceleration and/or enrichment classes, which are optional. The remaining time is for vacation. The district school board voted to move to this calendar following a study of national and state data indicating benefits to student learning.

Realizing the importance of a well-rounded individual, all district schools offer a range of co-curricular and athletic programs. Included are academic bowls, Future Problem Solving, Odyssey of the Mind and Special Olympics. Sports offerings include soccer, cross country and track, football, basketball, softball, baseball, golf and tennis.

All schools in the district serve breakfast and lunch.

Parochial schools

Catholic roots run deep in Nelson County.

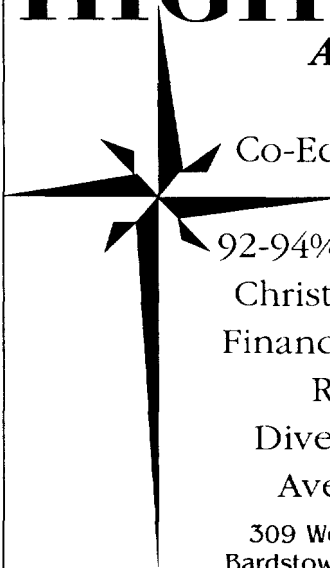

Many Catholic families turn to parishes to provide a religious education for their children.

Parents send their children to parochial school, not only for the excellent education, but for the Christ-centered values that are taught, said Cecelia Price of the Archdiocese of Louisville.

Bethlehem High School, the only Catholic high school run by the archdiocese outside of Jefferson County, has more

Technology Center

Student from area high schools, as well as adults, can attend Nelson County Area Technology Center.

Located on the Nelson County High School campus, it offers short-term classes in industrial and technical skill fields including computer-aided drafting, carpentry, computer repair, welding, health sciences, industrial maintenance, cabinet-making and heating and air conditioning. Articulation agreements with advanced technical schools and colleges allow graduates to receive college credit toward associate and technical degrees.

The technology center also offers short-term classes for industry upgrades and license renewal.

Strong support from local businesses and industries provides current curricula, state-of-the-art equipment and job placement opportunities.

Student organizations, such as Vocational Industrial Clubs of America and Health Occupations Students of America, are designed to help students develop leadership and citizenship abilities through interaction with professional, business and other student organizations. Students acquire self-confidence, good work habits, practical problem-solving skills, teamwork skills.

Other private schools

There are other religious schools in Nelson County.

Nelson County Baptist Church School provides Christian education for the children of church members only.

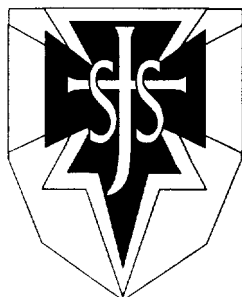

And Our Lady of the Rosary provides Catholic home schooling education.

SCHOOL ENROLLMENT

Parents, if you have children to enroll in school in Nelson County for the first time, there are several documents you will need and requirements that must be met.

The Kentucky Education Reform Act of 1990 makes preschool education an important part of every school district's program.

Preschool programs are educational programs that focus on the physical, intellectual, social and emotional development of 3- and 4-year-old children.

There also are a handful of child care centers in Nelson County that provide preschool-age educational activities and care.

Bardstown schools

The Bardstown School District provides a preschool program for all 3- and 4-year-olds. Requirements for preschoolers and children entering school include the following:

- Must be 3 or 4 years old by Oct. 1 of the school year;
- Birth certificate;
- Social Security card;
- Physical exam;
- Immunization certificate; and
- TB skin test.

Additional requirements for at-risk or special needs children involve meeting KERA income guidelines or qualifying through a referral-assessment process as a three- or four-year-old with a disability.

Nelson County schools

The Nelson County School District requirements for children entering school include:

- Official birth certificate; and
- Immunization certificate.

Children must have had all immunizations (diphtheria, whooping cough, tetanus, polio and measles) and have a completed medical examination form on file before they can attend classes. If a physical exam is completed for pre-school and meets state requirements, then it is acceptable for the Primary/K program.

Children entering sixth grade must have signed proof of a physical examination and a second MMR (measles, mumps, rubella) shot recorded on the current immunization certificate.

If a child is transferring from another school system, a parent or guardian must contact the new school and sign a release of records form as early as possible. If your child is enrolled in special education classes, please tell the new school so those records can also be requested from the previous school.

A child who will be 5 years old on or before Oct. 1 may enter school. A child who will be 6 on or before Oct. 1, must enter school.

Pre-school services are available to 4-year-old children eligible for the federal free-lunch program and to 3-year-old children with disabilities.

Students who live outside the school district must meet admission standards and pay tuition to attend the Nelson County Schools.

RELIGION

Kentucky." It stands today as the oldest of all brick Catholic churches in the state.

Catholicism was making such strides into the area that in 1816 Bishop Flaget moved to Bardstown, at that time a city growing faster than Louisville, to establish his seat of authority.

The city's growth convinced the Catholics to use Bardstown as the site to erect a massive example of their faith, St. Joseph Proto-Cathedral.

But by 1841 Louisville had outstripped Bardstown. The Catholics moved their seat to Louisville, leaving their "big-city" cathedral here as a parish church.

St. Joseph

Bardstown ranked with Boston, New York and Philadelphia as a major Catholic diocese when the interior of St. Joseph was finished in 1823.

Bricks for the building were baked on the grounds. Wood was hewn from the wilderness to craft the huge columns.

But it was not until 1880 that the interior was transformed from simple to lavish, majestic and historic when donations of art were awarded and funds poured in.

Today the church contains valuable paintings, gifts of Francis I, King of the Two Sicilies, and of Pope Leo XII. King Louis Philippe of France also furnished generous gifts.

One of the church's oldest and most valuable paintings, known as the Martyrdom of St. Bartholomew or the Flaying of St. Bartholomew, was recently transported to the J. Paul Getty Museum of Art in Los Angeles to be restored.

After more than 170 years of hanging on the church walls collecting dust the painting was dark with grime.

The museum is doing the restoration free of charge. The painting which was painted by Mattea Preti in the 1600s was a gift from King Francis I of the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies to Bishop Flaget in 1827.

The painting is expected back at the church in 2001.

Today the church is a national landmark listed on the National Historic Register.

And today Bardstown is once again a seat. In 1995 the Vatican named it a "titular," or honorary seat, one of only three in the United States. The title acknowledges Bardstown's contribution to Catholic church heritage.

Nazareth

The St. Thomas Farm was not only the cradle for a seminary — it was the birth place of a religious order of women, the Sisters of Charity of Nazareth.

Established by one of Flaget's colleagues, Bishop John David, in 1812 at the farm, the order and its handful of pioneer sisters moved to the current campus just north of Bardstown in 1822.

The sisters, whose missions were nursing the sick and providing schools for the children, founded several schools in the area. They also opened the county's hospital, Flaget Memorial.

Today the Nazareth campus contains a pre-school, a retirement community, an art gallery, a museum, a historic church and manicured grounds used for jogging and walking by the community.

Gethsemani

Trappist monks from Melleray, France, arrived in the southern end of Nelson County in 1848, settling on a farm first known as a monastery, then later was dignified with the title of abbey.

For years the monks maintained daily silence, designating one or two of their number to speak with the public. Today the brothers at the Abbey of Gethsemani visit openly with visitors, offer retreats for both men and women and allow the public to use miles of woodland trails carved through their 2,300-acre property near Culvertown.

The monks support themselves and their many charities by making and selling cheese and fruitcakes. Their reason for being, however, is to pray.

Current scene

Christian denominations abound in Nelson County today, although a worshipper seeking a mosque, Buddhist temple or Jewish synagogue must travel to Louisville.

There are 11 Catholic churches in the county, including those at the convent and monastery. Baptist churches number 20, while United Methodist churches total five.

Other denominations represented in the more than 65 congregations are Presbyterian, Christian Church, Disciples of Christ, Episcopalian, Assembly of God, Church of God, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, Jehovah's Witness, African Methodist Episcopal, Church of God of Prophecy, Church of Christ, Apostolic-Pentecostal and Lutheran.

Several non-denominational Christian churches are also located in the county.
